

In my opinion, I believe that it would reduce runtime when using `newton_raphson` with a value selected by the user compared to using `newton_raphson_randomised`. This is due to the fact that when the user selects an initial  $x_0$ , they can make an educated guess, while the randomized version will make a much more inefficient guesses.